Gütersloh, September 30, 2022 – Fans of classical music are in for a treat: The exhibition “Opera is Dead - Long Live Opera!” will be on view in Bonn from September 30, 2022 to February 5, 2023, supported by the legendary Ricordi Archive in Milan. The archive, which is part of Bertelsmann, houses a wealth of unique testimonies to 200 years of Italian opera history.

The exhibition at the Bundeskunsthalle in Bonn represents a tour de force through opera history. Starting with the precursors of opera at the court of the Medicis in Florence, it traces the process of creation and transformation of opera as an art form up to the present day and presents the combination of the various forms of art (music, singing, acting, dance) and craft (costume, stage, lighting) to create a Gesamtkunstwerk (total work of art). This is illustrated by means of paintings and opera posters, costume and stage designs, scores and programs, film clips and recordings of numerous works of opera. Kaleidoscopic glimpses of some of the world’s foremost opera houses – including La Scala in Milan – serve to convey a comprehensive picture of this special form of musical theater, from its beginnings in the 16th century to modern-day opera productions.

The Ricordi Archive, regarded as one of the world’s major privately owned music collections, is contributing nearly 70 exhibits, making it the show’s most important lender. Each of these valuable documents and artifacts tells a story of its own, such as the original portrait of Giuseppe Verdi by Leopoldo Metlicovitz, a copy of which every subscriber to the Ricordi magazine Gazzetta Musicale di Milano received as a gift at the time. Or facsimiles of the stage designs for Puccini’s Turandot, which were sent to opera houses so that exact copies of the premiere stage design could be created there, and the original costume designs for the Verdi operas Aida and Falstaff as well as for Giacomo Puccini’s Turandot and Madama Butterfly.

Alongside Giuseppe Verdi, Gaetano Donizetti, Vincenzo Bellini and Gioachino Rossini, Giacomo Puccini is one of the five greats of 19th-century Italian opera whose works were published by Casa Ricordi and are documented in the Archivio Storico Ricordi. The exhibition in Bonn pays special attention to the exceptional composer, devoting several chapters to Puccini: “Vissi d’arte: Giacomo Puccini’s Tosca at the Vienna State Opera,” “La Scala in Milan – From failure to blockbuster: Madama Butterfly,” and “Puccini’s Enigmatic Opera: Turandot.”

The history of La Scala in Milan is closely interwoven with that of Casa Ricordi: Just a few years after the publishing house was founded in 1808, the publisher Giovanni Ricordi took over the archives of the famous opera house and from then on maintained close ties with its artistic directors.

In the following decades, the publishing house secured the rights to the operas of the “Big Five” as well as those of numerous other important composers, and in some cases handled the worldwide distribution of their works. The publisher’s managers very successfully marketed opera productions and exerted a great deal of influence over productions and performances.

The show, carefully prepared by curators Katharina Chrubasik and Alexander Meier-Dörzenbach, offers visitors a unique opportunity to gain direct insights into 400 years of growth and change in the institution of opera. The exhibition also marks another milestone in the public presentation of the Ricordi archive: Bertelsmann is bringing valuable original documents from Milan to Germany for the second time. In Verdi Year 2013, the 200th anniversary of the composer’s birth, the archive’s treasures were presented for the first time in Germany as part of a European traveling exhibition. The show at that time - “The Enterprise of Opera: Verdi. Boito. Ricordi” - was shown in Berlin and Gütersloh, and subsequently traveled to Brussels, Milan and Vincenzo. This was followed in 2019/20 by the show “Verdi: Creating Otello and Falstaff – Highlights from the Ricordi Archive” at New York’s renowned The Morgan Library & Museum. The Ricordi Archive, unique for its cohesiveness, is thus increasingly gaining visibility and importance in an artistic and art historical context.

In all, the Archivio Storico Ricordi houses some 7,800 original scores from more than 600 operas and hundreds of other compositions, close to 10,000 libretti, a large iconographic collection with valuable stage and costume designs, and the extensive historical business correspondence of Casa Ricordi. The Italian music publisher, founded by Giovanni Ricordi in Milan in 1808, had a significant impact on the cultural history of Italy and Europe. Bertelsmann, the international media company that also owns the BMG music group and the New York-based trade publishing group Penguin Random House, acquired Casa Ricordi in 1994, but disposed of the music company and Ricordi’s music rights again in the following years. Only the affiliated Archivio Storico Ricordi remained in the Group. Since then, Bertelsmann has had the archival materials comprehensively indexed, digitized and, in many cases, restored. The company also organizes concerts and exhibitions to keep Casa Ricordi’s cultural heritage alive and make it accessible to as many people as possible.
